

KPFA FOLIO

OCTOBER 8 - 21, 1962

SUNDAY, May 13

Our last day of live broadcasting, May 13, was a success in every respect—a success in programming, a success in community participation, and a success financially. After it was all over, a veteran of radio broadcasting happened to mention that our day was “a landmark in the recent history of broadcasting”—because no station, radio or TV, had within memory broadcast such a 12-hour block of live programming. Networks have done a spectacular job of presenting party political conventions, men in orbit, charity talkathons and so forth. But here we had twelve solid hours of a variety of programs—studio concerts, studio drama, panel discussions, puppet shows.

Well, we are trying it again—to launch our 1962 subscription drive, with its goal of 2,000 additional subscribers to be achieved in a three-week period. There are all manner of arguments we use to convince listeners to subscribe to KPFA. But no argument, we feel, is quite so compelling as our determination to present the best sort of radio possible—and as much live broadcasting as our budget will allow.

- 11:45 Live programming begins at this point, with “Report to the Subscriber.” During the morning, we will broadcast the following recorded programs, starting at 10 a.m.—“China Press Reports,” “Books” with Kenneth Rexroth, and “Agamemnon,” first play in the Oresteia trilogy by Aeschylus.
- 12:00 Philip F. Elwood with guests on “Jazz Review.” . . . Malvina Reynolds and her “Megacycles” in Studio C for a half-hour of audience participation singing . . . the Berkeley Puppeteers with a surprise play for children.
- 2:00 “Mexican and Brazilian Folk Music” from Studio B, with Tim and Pam Harding, Pete Eisenberg and Bill Hutchinson . . . John Leonard and “Book Report” . . . Kenneth Rexroth and Anthony Boucher with a report on the San Francisco opera season.
- 4:00 Charles Frankel, Republican candidat  for the State Assembly from San Francisco, answers questions from a panel of KPFA staff members and program participants on “Invitation” . . . A concert from Studio B, with Margot Blum, mezzo-soprano, and pianist Dwight Peltzer performing Schoenberg’s “Book of the Hanging Gardens.” They are then joined by violinist Jeanne Marvin for a selection of Baroque arias with obbligato violin and continuo.
- 6:00 Felix Greene talks to Elsa Knight Thompson about “The Nature of Freedom” . . . music director Will Ogdon talks to Salvatore Martirano on “Meet the Composer” about the problems of the avant-garde composer in the public school music program. Mr. Martirano’s “O, O That Shakespearean Rag” will be heard.
- 8:00 “Literature,” a play by Arthur Schnitzler, performed in English by the Labyrinth Theatre Club, with George Moore as Baron Clemens, Mary Barnett as Margret, and Eric Vaughn as Gustav . . . Trevor Thomas and a panel of political experts give a last-minute run-down on what to expect in the elections on “The Dopesters.”
- 10:00 Music . . . Pauline Kael takes to the microphone with guests from the world of “Movies” . . . Jan Dawson performs August Strindberg’s one-act, one-voice play, “The Stronger” . . . Folk music with Rolf Cahn.
